Brandon Chapman

Major: African American Studies and Political Science

Among his many achievements while at the College, Political Science and African American Studies Double-Major Brandon Chapman attended the Ralph Bunche Summer Institute (RBSI) at Duke University last summer. This intensive five-week program is named in honor of the 1950 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Ralph J. Bunche. The competitive program introduces doctoral study to undergraduate students from underrepresented racial and ethnic groups. Brandon’s acceptance in RBSI has already placed him in a very elite group of minority political science students from around the country; we are very proud of him for that and looking for great things from him in the future.
